Happy Easter!!,

This weekend, St John paints a picture of heaven for us. His vision of heaven used to be inspiring. However, in the last hundred years this image of heaven as filled with choirs of singing angels and throngs of bowing saints has given heaven a bad reputation. It makes people think that heaven is boring, I think mainly because people are not welcoming to the idea of praising God for all eternity, maybe due to the overwhelming idea that there is too much self-glorification to desire to give that up for God.

What happened? Why did the idea of "praising God for all eternity" inspire the first Christians, and why does it turn off many of today's Christians? Maybe because in recent times many Christians have forgotten what "praising God" really means. In the Bible, the word "praise" means much more than singing songs and clapping our hands.

Let's review again St John's description of heavenly praise. He writes, "Then I heard every creature in heaven and on earth and under the earth and in the sea, everything in the universe, cry out: 'To the one who sits on the throne and to the Lamb be blessing and honor, glory and might, forever and ever'." He says that all creatures, all things in the universe cried out with praise to God. How can they do that? How is this worthy of me and all that I see as value when looking into the mirror and only seeing myself? Then to ask how can rocks and Saturn's rings and mosquitoes cry out with praise to God as well? Certainly not by singing songs and having a party for that is not the substance of praise.

Rather, they, the angelic chorus, praise God by being fully what they were created to be, by reflecting God's wisdom through being true to themselves.

Our lives need to be like that in all that we do now and into all eternity. We praise God fully by becoming fully alive now not later. In heaven we praise God fully not because we will float on clouds playing harps, but because we will finally understand what it means to be fully alive.

All our capacities for knowledge, love, wisdom, joy, and creativity will be maxed-out in heaven. So...if you want to live in heaven, as I have earnestly stated before, start living today.

Blessings,
Fr Jim
